

“The Thought Whisperer”

Ayesha Shoaib

The shadows follow in the distance,
With the crayons scattered on the floor.

Each veil waiting to be dropped,
The canvas is waiting to be filled.

The thoughts swayed in the spotlight,
The concealed never whispered.

The water feigns the clouds,
While fish sulk in their sleep.

A restless string swung within the canopy,
But the horror always sparkled.

However, in a meaningless motion of fuss;
And impractical palace of words;

While moving in the horizontal puzzle,
One can never run in circles!

Biography of the Poet

Ayesha Shoaib born in 1999, in a Muslim household, in Pakistan realised her passion for writing at the age of 14 , which lead to her immense interest in English Literature, especially English Poetry. She completed her schooling from Presentation Convent High School and later on graduated from Women University Mardan with English as a major.

Having leadership and artistic skills, Ayesha has participated in stage dramas, dances and choir, which speaks volumes of her artistic mindset and personality. She has also received awards in sports and debates in school and university,

Her passion for writing started after she started connecting with music, poetry and novels. Her curiosity and interest lead her to explore her creativity and thus she landed in conducting research, doing calligraphy, producing creative writings, and composing poetry. To better herself, Ayesha took up courses in Creative Writing, Illustrations, and Children Stories. At present, she is polishing her expertise in public speaking. Ayesha is still learning and looks forward to educating herself more and more. Her goal as well as passion is to be recognised for her creativity and writing and become a better teacher in future. Her research studies at M.Phil strongly paves an attainable path for her to be an agent of change through her poems.