

A Comparative Survey On Minority Segregation In Bapsi Sidhwa's Work Ice-Candy-Man

Mr. M. Siva Kumar¹, Dr. P. Boomiraja²

¹Ph.D. Research Scholar, (Reg. No. 19221254011003),
Department of English,
Sri Ram Nallamani Yadava College for Arts and Science, Tenkasi,
Affiliated to Manonmaniam Sundaranar University, Tirunelveli.

²Supervisor and Associate Professor,
Department of English,
Sri Ram Nallamani Yadava College for Arts and Science, Tenkasi.
Affiliated to Manonmaniam Sundaranar University, Tirunelveli.

Abstract

Bapsi Sidhwa's fiction deals with the pre and Postcolonial period of the India subcontinent. Her fiction not only brings to life the horror of the partition of the India subcontinent in 1947 but also vividly portrays the complexities of life in the subcontinent after independence. What makes her work interesting from the Postcolonial point of view is the way in which she rewrites the history of the subcontinent. The novel also highlights the dilemma the Parsis have faced over the centuries to assimilate themselves in to as alien culture and risking the loss of their identity. The impending Partition of the India subcontinent in 1947 as depicted in the novel might prove that all the efforts that Parsis have made over the centuries to assimilate themselves into an Indian culture are futile since the community all of a sudden faces extinction in the wake of the Partition. Thus, Sidhwa undercuts the received historical view that the Parsis were totally indifferent to the Partition of the country. And Sidhwa by giving voice to the marginalized Parsis demonstrates the their choice of remaining neutral in the contexts of the Partition was not out of indifference but forced upon them by the complex historical reality. Under the impact of Pakistani point of view. Sidhwa not only tries to resurrect the image of Jinnah but also demystifies the image of Gandhi and Nehru.

Keywords : Partition, Feminism, Minority, Community, Marginalization.

Introduction

Bapsi Sidhwa is a Parsi, Pakistani Punjabi woman writing in English, the best of her fiction is set in the turbulent times of the Partition of India and the postcolonial South Asia (O'Neil 1376). Bapsi Sidhwa's novel Ice-Candy-Man tries to reassess or reconstruct the history of Partition giving voice to the marginalised groups on the levels of gender, class, ethnicity and nationality. Sidhwa reviews the history of Partition from a more or less Parsi, feminist and Pakistani perspective to displace or counter the discursive tendencies of historical thought in Europe or India. The novel deals with the predicament of female characters in a patriarchal society, Parsi identity in the backdrop of a tumultuous relationship between India and Pakistan.

August 1947 was the time when Indian sub-continent was divided into two nation states; India and Pakistan. The casualties during Partition of India amount to more than a million, with a thirteen million people as homeless and refugees on both sides of the border. According to a report, around seventy-five thousand women were abducted or raped (Ayres 106). The novel Ice-Candy-Man familiarizes us with these horrible and dreadful times in the contemporary South Asia. The novel rewrites history giving voice to the Parsi community. The major thematic concerns of the novel are issues of socio-cultural identity, feeling of alienation and anxiety due to a minority status of Parsis among other dominant communities.

Bapsi Sidhwa was born in Karachi on August 11, 1938, her major novels reflect her Parsi, female and Pakistani Identity. Sidhwa in her childhood, like the girl child narrator of the novel Ice-Candy-Man, had to go through many painful experiences due to her physical inadequacies. Her reading of the Victorian satirist endowed her with a great sense of humour and irony. Sidhwa points out the autobiographical content of her novels, she says: In Ice-Candy-Man or Cracking India, the first part is autobiographical, except that the central character of the child is not me perse...This child is informed by my adult consciousness. So a lot of me is there, but other bits are purely imaginative. For instance, the relationship between Lenny and her male cousin- I had no such male cousin! I had no such Ayah either. But we did have servants like Imam Din and Yusuf. So partially I took things directly from my own experience, but the rest is created." (Sidhwa, "My Place in the World" 291)

Most of her novels like The Crow Eaters (1980), Ice-Candy-Man (1988), An American Brat (1983) and The Pakistani Bride (1983) panoramically describe the Parsi way of life and voice their concerns. Her novel Ice-Candy-Man narrates the experiences of an eight year physically disabled girl child Lenny during the communal conflicts of ninety forty-seven. In 1947, India was partitioned into two different countries on the basis of religion that resulted in the eruption of sectarian riots leading to the unimaginable human and economic loss and suffering. The novel Ice-Candy-Man is set in those turbulent times when the existence became nightmarish for the subjects of the subcontinent, especially the women. Binod Mishra and Sanjay Kumar opine:...“woman-as-victim” and “women-as-saviour” of women and the weak, condemning male chauvinism and violence-mongering callous selfishness of the politicians and barbaric nature of communal frenzy in targeting hapless minorities and women, Sidhwa artistically juxtaposes the incidents on both sides of the border to go beyond narrow national commitments. Consequently, the appeal of her novel is not constrained by her Parsi or Pakistani background. (Mishra 225) continent during the Partition. Sidhwa in the novel tries to present her view of history from the perspective of the marginalized groups to counter the British and Indian narratives of the history of the Partition. The novel was first published in 1988 in India and England as The-Ice-Candy Man; in 1991, the US edition appeared named as Cracking India to avoid the connotations of drug culture (Brians 104).

Sidhwa's Ice-Candy-Man is a profound novel depicting the turmoil of the Indian sub-

In the novel Sidhwa has mostly made use of the first person narrative technique to express the conditions of Lenny's life, her Parsi family background, and the general atmosphere of the turbulent times of Partition. Thus the personal accounts of the girl child narrator Lenny become very much suffused with the major currents of the contemporary history, which according to Rahul Sapra result in the rewriting of the "history of the subcontinent, thereby undercutting the British views of history imposed on the subcontinent" (Sapra 9).

The novel depicts the psycho-sexual development of the girl child narrator Lenny. The novel describes the childhood activities of Lenny and her cousin that involve bodily closeness although at the level of innocence on the part of Lenny. It is important to note her that this relationship more aptly described as a childhood play cannot be considered incestuous since in Parsis the marriages between cousins are common. While Ice-Candy-Man deals with the Partition of India told from the perspective of a Parsi girl child, her other novels like The Crow Eaters and An American Brat are also notable for the description of Parsi ethos. The issue of interethnic romance is a major theme in the novels of Bapsi Sidhwa. Parsi community has apprehensions about the interethnic marriage due to their negative growth of population. That is why Faredoon Junglewalla in the novel The Crow Eaters does not allow the marriage of his son Yazdi with an Anglo-Indian girl Rosy. This arbitrary decision of Faredoon had a very devastating effect on the life of his son. The very same situation we find in the novel The American Brat. In the novel, we see that Feroza is a typical Parsi Pakistani girl, her mother Zareen worries about her orthodox views and nature. Cyrus Ginwalla, her father, has his own fears that his daughter will end up marrying a non-Parsi boy, and out of this paranoia, he decides to send Feroza to her Uncle Manek in the United States of America. As a South Asian, she undergoes a very harassing attitude of the checking staff at the Kennedy International Airport.

Similarly, The American Brat by Sidhwa, encodes the cultural shock of Parsi immigrants in America, in the novel we see that Feroza, a religious minded and conservative girl is shocked to see the moral decay and the filth of the America along with its material and technological progress. We have a similar description in the novel The Crow Eaters when Faredoon takes his wife Putli and his mother in law Jerbanoo to England to save the newly wedded Tanya and Billy from their troublesome nature. Putli and Jebrano who think highly of the culture and morals of the English are frustrated with their experience in England. In America Feroza is utterly transformed by the new socio-cultural environment. First she moves in with Jo and joins the University of Denver, and then she falls in love with David and writes to her parents about her decision to marry David. Cyrus and Zareen are extremely shaken by the idea of their daughter marrying a Jew, and ultimately with the efforts of Zareen and David's realisation of the differences between the two communities, the relationship ends in a break-up. But not before it has taken its toll on the emotional and mental health of Feroza.

The novel Ice-Candy-Man is full of symbolic incidents, characters and details. It provides richness, depth and complexity to the novel enabling it to express a range of meanings to the novel. The symbolism in the novel is very much influenced by the specific cultural conditions of the Parsi community and life in Lahore. Lenny's nightmares and internal fears as a child can be interpreted as the external chaos of the city of Lahore and the subcontinent in general. Here is an account of Lenny's nightmare:

Children lie in a warehouse. Mother and Ayah move solicitously. The atmosphere is business-like and relaxed. Godmother sits by my bed smiling indulgently as men in uniforms quietly slice off a child's arm here, a leg there. She strokes my head as they dismember me. I feel no pain. Only an abysmal sense of loss and a chilling horror that no one is concerned by what's happening. (31)

The Partition had a manifold impact on the life of the subcontinent; it signalled the breakdown of the bonds of love and peaceful existence as well as the failure of the inter-community networks to resist the bloodshed. It had an intense impact on the relationship of various classes, to see Partition mainly as a matter of religious or communal conflict is to ignore the working of power dynamics in the subcontinent and the material forces shaping all the history in general. The violence also represents a crisis at the level of man and woman relationship. Throughout the history, the violence done to women is the natural corollary of any religious, political or cultural conflict. As a Pakistani nationalist writer, Sidhwa has tried to expose the politics of the dominant western or Indian tradition of thought that arraign the trio- the Muslim community, the Muslim League and Jinnah- for the troubled waters of the history of the subcontinent. Sidhwa tries to correct this prejudice or bias of the historians towards her country, by pointing out the constructed nature of the history of the sub-continent devised by the dominant power structures.

Sidhwa's depiction of Partition may be Pakistan oriented but she is above the narrow parochial nationalism, as she writes from the perspective of a marginal community in a conflict of dominant communities. Moreover, she writes from a gynocentric perspective voicing the concerns of women in the subcontinent (B. Singh 364). Sidhwa's central concern is the condition of a Hindu Ayah and her sufferings at the hands of the Muslim community or lover, i.e., Ice-Candy-Man. Paranjape quotes Urdu poet Faiz Ahmed Faiz that the novels of Bapsi Sidhwa are "Ruthlessly truthful, deeply perceptive, she tells her story with rare courage, frankness, and good humour" (82).

The novel rewrites history giving voice to the Parsi community who are left less than a million in the world. The Parsi novelists writing in English are generally divided into two broad categories: the writers like B.K. Karanjia and Dina Mehta, who live in their own countries and write about their socio-cultural concerns as well as the expatriate writers who have left their home country and write from the second country. Writers like Rohinton Mistry, Firdaus Kanga, Farrukh Dhondy and Bapsi Sidhwa fall into the latter category (Dodiya vii). All these writers assert and feel proud of their Parsi identity and ethnicity.

The major thematic concerns of the Parsi writers are issues of their particular cultural and religious identity, sentiments of estrangement, and apprehensions of their extinction from the face of the earth. Although these authors deal with the predicament of the Parsi community, they also deal with the general issues of life and humanity, for example, Firdaus Kanga writes about the issues that are central to the community as well as to any individual. Rohinton Mistry talks about his community, country and the relationship between various communities in India, Farrukh Dhondy writes about the issues that transcend the national boundaries and engages with the question of inter-racial harmony. Almost all Parsi writers, despite their assertion of the Parsi identity, affirm that communal harmony and tolerance are the prerequisites for the peaceful co-existence of various communities.

The novel Ice-Candy-Manis set in Lahore where the dominant religious community is Muslim with not more than two hundred Parsi families left. Parsis in India came 1300 years ago when Arabs captured Persia. They came to the western port of India near Gujarat around 785 A.D. whose king Madhav Rana allowed them to enter his territory on the assurance by the Parsi Priest that the Parsi People will not cause disturbance or threat to the Indian society by their differences.

In the novel Ice-Candy-Man we have a reference to the above anecdote, Colonel Barucha says: When we are kicked out of Persia by the Arabs thirteen hundred years ago, what did we do? Did we shout and argue? No!' roars the colonel, and hastily provides his own answer before anybody could interrupt. 'We got into boats and sailed to India!' (37)

It is notable, and that Parsis as a community has adopted the neutral position not deciding to take part in the communal conflict during the Partition. At the meeting of Parsi community at Waris Road, Colonel Barucha says, "We must hunt with the hounds and run with the hare" (16). Later he warns the Parsi community as follows: "Hindus, Muslims and even the Sikhs are going to jockey for power: and if you jump into the middle you'll be mingled into chutney" (36). However, this neutral position was not as simple as that and resulted in a kind of alienation and loss of belongingness for the community. Dr. Mody argues against Colonel Barucha's ideal of neutral position saying, "Our neighbours will think that we are betraying them and siding by the English"(37).

The identity of Parsi characters in the novel is essentially a 'hybridized phenomenon' involving the relationship between the European culture, Parsi Culture and the Indian experience (Ashcroft et al. 220). Sidhwa speaks at length about the Parsi origin, their historical roots and their cultural mores in the novel. There is a reference in the novel to the Parsi way of disposing of the dead. Godmother tells Lenny about the Parsi way of last rites:

Instead of polluting the earth by burying it, or wasting fuel by burning it, we feed God's creatures. The soul is in heaven, chatting with God in any case...or broiling in hell like Mini's will (114). Bapsi Sidhwa as a Parsi writer brings out the drawbacks and foibles of her community as well as the dominant community. Her novel Ice-Candy-Man can be seen as giving voice to the Parsi Community that is marginalised and silenced community in the Partition discourse as well as the history of the two postcolonial nation states. Bapsi Sidhwa's first published novels The Crow Eaters, An American Brat, also deal with the theme of the Parsi Identity. In these novels, we get detailed accounts of Parsi way of life, their hopes and aspirations, rituals, rites, customs, beliefs, superstitions, myths and legends. Sidhwa has used the title of her first novel The Crow Eaters to suggest "the crow like high pitched garrulousness of the Parsis" (Singh 8). While in The Crow Eaters Sidhwa's treatment of Parsi community is highly satiric and humorous, the Ice Candy Man presents the dilemma and strategically difficult position of the Parsis in the geo-cultural space of the postcolonial Indian subcontinent. The American Brat reflects the tensions created by inter-community romance or marriages within the Parsi community as their very existence is in the danger of extinction. Bapsi Sidhwa is one of the few Parsi novelists writing in English today, her fiction is marked by a penchant for humour and realistic descriptions of the contemporary socio-cultural phenomenon. Her portrayal of the Parsi concerns in her fiction, the characterization of the Parsi characters, and their way of life acquaint us with Parsi world and help in voicing the issues that are central to Parsis as a community.

Work Cited :

1. Postcolonial Writing." The Empire Writes Back: Theory and Practice in Post-colonial Literatures. London: Routledge, 1989. 37-58.
2. Ayres, Alyssa. "Religious Violence Beyond Borders: Reframing South Asian Cases." Religion and Conflict in South and Southeast Asia: Disrupting Violence. Eds. Linell E. Candy, and Sheldon W. Simon. New York: Routledge, 2007. 105-121.
3. Brians, Paul. "Bapsi Sidhwa: Cracking India." Modern South Asian Literature in English. Westport: Greenwood Press, 2003. 99-110.
4. Contemporary Fiction: An Anthology of Female Writers. Eds. Vandana Pathak, Urmila Dabir, and Shubha Mishra. New Delhi: Sarup and Sons, 2008. 78-90.
5. Nimsarkar, P.D. "Dimensionality of History and Politics in Bapsi Sidhwa's Ice Candy Man."
6. Sapra, Rahul. "A Postcolonial Appraisal of Bapsi Sidhwa's Fiction." Parsi Fiction. Vol. 2. Eds. Novy Kapadia, and Jaydipsinh Dodiya, and Rajinder Kumar Dhawan. New Delhi: Prestige Books, 2001. 9-28.
7. Singh, Khushwant. Train to Pakistan. 1956. New Delhi: Penguin. 2009.

8. Sidwa, Bapsi. ,Ice-Candy-Man. 1988. New Delhi: Penguin, 1989.

9. Sidhwa, Bapsi. "Points of Departure: International Writers on Writing and Politics. Interview by David Montenegro and Adrienne Cecile Rich. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1991.